The sorting is easily done by lowing an empty basket at one hand, into which he choice apples are placed, while the culls are placed in a pile on the ground. An experienced man can sort rapidly and uccurately. The choice apples are

r Only clean barrels should be used. Old door-barrels, unless carefully washed and dried, will useally impart a musty flavor to the frut before indiwinter, especially if the ur in the cellar is moist. The first apples which are put in market barrels should be "faced." The facing consists in placing two or three layers on the lawer head with stems down; that is, with stems pointing towards the head. Clean, bright apples of ordinary size should be selected for this purpose. The rest of the apples may be poured into the barrel. This pouring, if properly done, will not injure the apples. Eggs can be poured. Use a basket with a swinging landle, one which can be lowered into the barrel and turned while there, and hold the apples back —A peculiarity of the older orange there, and hold the apples back trees he Florida this season is that most with the hand, so that they will with the hand, so that they will be the control of the cont with the hand, so that they will not pour too rapidly. From these the apples can be sorted luto barrels, and the learnels can be headed up at leisnre. It is imperative that the apples should not rattle in the barrel after it is headed. Apples shrink a little after they are barreled. They will usually sweat, also. Therefore, delay the heading up for some days. The barrel should be rather more than full when the head is put in. If the upper anyer of apples is considerably bru sed no harm will result, aspecially if the head is soft wood, so that the juice is readily ubsorbed. It is better to join these apples severely than to allow those in the meterior to rattle. If the heading is done in a building, a lever press of simple construction does good work, but it requires two men, one to press and one to adjust the head. They are found only in Georg'n and South Carolina This is something I prize very highly—the Florida Towhee. There are but two sets in the United States, and this is one of them. Here's tho black snow-bird's egg from New Brunswick, the diveatcher from Arizona and one from Arkansas. And here's something that lots of people gat mixed up—the whinlots of people get mixed ap—the whip-poor-will and chuck-will-the-widow. The egg of the latter is about twice the size of the former. This is a funny fellow, the searlot tauager. It never builds its own nest, but lays in the first nest it comes neross.

Mr. Perry brought ont the eggs of the bobolink from Vermont, which visite bere in the winter as the rice bird; the starling from England, the cow bird from Yucatan, live varieties of the bluck-bird; six of the lark, Including one f om Mexico, and four varieties of the orible. One of the most curious of all was that of the burrowing of Culifornia, which bailds its nest in a holo from six to ten feet under ground. Another collection was that of the Amerlcan eagle from Cabbage island. This is a white egg about the size of a goose egg, with an unusually rough surface. Then there is the wild tarkey, ruffe! grouse, plover, tlamingo, sand hill erane, pelican, woodcock, gannet, suako bird, horned owl, buzzard, crow, guil and hendreds of others which it would be almost impossible to mention.

They will never make good, sound, marketable ordens There are many ways of keeping good, sound, ripe, dry onions. The great point is to keep them dry. He you maist recollect that even a ripe dry onion contains at least eighty pe ent, of water, and when a large ma of them are kept together they ar-liable to "sweat," and the kins and tops become damp, and if the tempera-ture is above freezing they will throw out roots and commence to grow, jet as they would in the damp soil. If a is necessary to keep them in a large mass, put them in a dry place, such as shed or baru; then they will reeze sadid, and stay frozen till wante In spring. They must be well cover-to keep them from thawing, and yo should avoid putting them in a barn wit a basement underneath where horeattle, sheep or logs are kept, as warmth from the animals neight that them out. Wa have kept them perfectly on the east side of a north and sout wall, where the snow drifts several feet high and remains all spring. They were simply covered with corp-stalk and leaves.

They can be placed three or four nches deep on shelves in a dry cellar, or in slat boxes holding about a basbel each. The lower boxes should be placed on beards, and not on the cella pinced on bounds, and not on the certar door. The boxes may be piled up one above suother, but in such a way as to "break joints" and admit of a cir-enlation of air all around and through every box. In other words, do no place the ends and sides of the boxe close to cack other. Leave a space of two or three luches between the boxes. A little ingenuity may be required to stack them up, and it is well to think out the method before you commence, so us to know exactly what you are going to do. At any rate, see that the opions are dry before storing them in the cellar or house, and do not pack the boxes too close, and give frequent ventilation and change of air by open-"About four hundred."
